BLACK WOMANHOOD

Black women have long been a central figure in the Black Arts Movement. Through her poetry and her deeply involved work with the movement, Audre Lorde, one of the South Side of Chicago, opened the space "The Ball" in response to the 1981 riot of respect given to Black American Cultural. This is an example of how intertwined the arts were during the time.

Audre Lorde, "The Ball"

Black womanhood serves as the embodiment of the Black community. Audre Lorde presented positive imagery related to the Black woman's lived experiences, offering representations of Black women—whether figuratively in poetry and paintings or abstractly in sculpture—remain integral to their mission. The works in this section celebrate political and cultural contributions of Black women, whose beauty and creativity often go unnoticed by those in positions of power.
